In the highlands of Scotland a chieftain is always addressed by the name of his estate. An amusing story in connection with this custom is told of Sir Frank Lockwood. On one occasion when Maclaine of Lochbuie and his wife arrived at a social gathering they were announced quite correctly by the butler as "Lochbule and Mrs. Maclaine," Sir Frank and Lady Lockwood happened to arrive at the same time, and Sir Frank, having overheard the other announcement, whispered hurriedly to the butler. The man hesitated, but apparently Lockwood convinced him, for when he flung open the foor to admit the Lockwoods the buter announced, "No Forty-three, Portman Square, and Lady Lockwood."-
